Biography Born: 10 May 1928 in San Francisco, CA Genre: Alternative Years Active: '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s, '00s Bob Dylan made his first mark with the folk-rock standards "Blowin' In The Wind" and "Don't Think Twice, It's All Right." His folk-rock career began around the time of the civil rights movement and before the Beatles were internationally recognized. That heavy influence would come through in Dylan's albums of the early-'60s. Dylan played the early folk music circuit, harmonizing and blues-influenced folk-rock performed in backwoods bars and coffeehouses. On the early folk albums, Dylan's falsetto vocals were often combined with harmonica. In concert he began bringing out the equal parts of his vocal and guitar skills, developing a three-sided harmonies that became recognized as the basic folk-rock style he would dole out consistently. Although Dylan's music was very much rooted in folk songs, it was not the folk music common with the folk revivalists of the '60s. His interpretation of the songs was very personal, making his albums heavy on themes and emotional juxtapositions. After Dylan signed with Columbia Records in 1962, the first recording session with the label yielded four singles. "The Times They Are A-Changin'" and "Like A Rolling Stone" were covers from the recently released folk album, The Freewheelin' Bob Dylan. The latter track appeared on the live album, Live! at the Gaslight, in 1963. "Blowin' In The Wind," "A Hard Rain's A-Gonna Fall," and "Don't Think Twice, It's All Right" were all originally released as singles on the album The Freewheelin' Bob Dylan. In addition to these
